Acquitted Rapist Sues Blog For Calling Him Serial Rapist

ABOVE THE LAW Irin Carmon —A Chicago man who was acquitted on a sexual assault charge is suing the legal blog Above The Law for implying that he's a serial rapist. If Meanith Huon gets his way, blogger sloppiness may cost ATL $50 million.

Rape Potpourri by ELIE MYSKAL

We've got a couple of rape stories, but I don't have enough rape humor to fill out two posts. So we'll tackle them together.

Huon, a lawyer, was initially charged with two counts of sexual assault, two counts of sexual abuse, and one count of unlawful restraint. A woman had jumped out of his car, ran through a cornfield barefoot, and knocked on a random person's door saying he had forced her into sexual activity. She later said she believed she was spending time with him for a job opportunity related to alcohol promotions, until he allegedly yelled at her to perform oral sex. Huon's version was that it was a consensual encounter, and
